MANAGER COMMENT

The current US election and the battle for control of the Senate have gained even more traction than usual in light of the pandemic – highlighted by the inability of the Democrat-controlled House and Republican Senate to reach an agreement on additional fiscal stimulus to assist those who have lost their jobs. Whether the US passes further fiscal stimulus post-election could be important for the economy and markets in the months ahead. Over the quarter the US Federal Reserve announced a shift to average inflation targeting. This would mean that inflation would be allowed to run above target for a while to compensate for periods of below-target inflation. The crucial inference of this is that rates are likely to remain lower for even longer. In the UK, fiscal stimulus is being staggered off, with the most recently announced job support scheme being less substantial than the “furlough scheme”. The completion of the ‘furlough scheme’ at the end of October is consequently likely to lead to a rise in unemployment. In Europe, however, sustenance measures for workers affected by Covid-19 have been prolonged.

In South Africa GDP fell by 16.4% q/q (quarter-on-quarter) giving an annualized growth rate of -51% and making it the fourth consecutive quarterly GDP decline for the country. During the same period, 2.2 million jobs were lost. During the course of the year there have been a number of interest rate cuts by the SARB (South African Reserve Bank). However, speculation around further interest rate cuts was put to an end when SARB issued a statement in September that it would be keeping the repo rate at 3.5%.

September has historically been the S&P 500's worst performing month over the last 30 years – 2020 was no different as the index was down 3.9% (USD) and 5.6% YTD and. The biggest detractors from performance are noted as being political uncertainty as the US election draws near, the end of the tech stock rally that propelled the index in August, and the Federal Reserve showing no signs of adding further stimulus to the financial system. The FTSE 100 was down 1.7% (USD) and -19.9% YTD, although European markets in general have been under pressure amidst concerns over the COVID-19 resurgence in cases.

During September South African equity markets were down for the second consecutive month, falling along with global markets. The FTSE/JSE All Share Index was down 2.2% for the month and down 4.9% YTD, with domestically exposed counters, such as banks and retailers, actually performing the best. On a sector basis, Financials returned 3.4% for the month, while Industrials returned -1.7%. After quite a strong run thus far in the year, Resources gave back 3% at the end of September. The ALBI fell by 0.05% and the STeFI returned 0.35%, while listed property had another significant negative month, returning -3%. The rand managed to finish the month stronger relative to most currencies, as it closed 1.6% stronger versus the dollar, 3.5% relative to the euro and 5.2% stronger to the sterling.
